QUESTIONS/COMMENTS FROM THE AUDIENCE/PRESS:

- There were three people who commented that they were unhappy about the noise and air traffic activity (especially the flight schools) at Bolingbrook’s Clow International Airport: Tony Gainstord, Lelsey Streitlmeier, and Howie Hughes. Ms. Streitlmeier also called for the flight schools to be terminated. Concern about airborne lead was cited, as well.
- Debbie Watson spoke about the current climate of hate and disrespect, reminding that we are all residents of Bolingbrook and should treat each other with respect and kindness. She also thanked those who spoke for being respectful and for being there for open dialogue.
- Joe DePaulo, General Manager of Clow International Airport, responded:
 - Regarding lead levels, there is a “miniscule” amount of lead in the air surrounding the airport. In over 20 years there has not been one report from anyone about any negative effects from lead.
 - Although aircraft activity has increased, more of them have quieter engines.
 - Joe also explained that when people have called to complain about the noise, he asks for their address so that he knows where the complaint comes from geographically (i.e. which area is being affected and by what pattern).
 - There has been a flight school at Clow since 1975.
 - Flight patterns and heights are set by the FAA according to legal and safety standards, which are also affected by weather and wind conditions. Certain requirements by flight examiners also require certain patterns.
 - The airport has received grant money from the FAA since 2005. Grant assurances dictate that the Village of Bolingbrook cannot disallow the flight schools at the airport. The FAA could sue the Village if those grant assurances are not followed.
 - Aircraft from other nearby airports also use Clow (Lewis, DuPage and Aero). The three flight schools from Lewis use Clow to avoid having to work with Lewis’ air traffic control tower. Even if Clow’s flight schools were gone, Lewis’ flight schools would increase their traffic.

- Joe is working with the flight schools to encourage them to move their operations to other airports.
- Our airport and its flight schools are stepping-stones to professional careers. The activity level at the schools has increased because of the demand for pilots.
- The Mayor also commented that in exploring options and solutions, they were learning more about the FAA grant requirements, and will provide more information as they determine what is and is not allowed.
